
Title: a note

Author: an explorer of Ilshenar

While wandering the lands of Llishenar I found this body hanging from a high tree. It appears to be a Celt as he is dressed in in their traditional way wearing not just the Kilt but the sash as well. I had to ward off a few crows who were making a feast of his lifeless body.
Most of him is intact but quite pecked at to the point that he may be hard to identify. However, after pulling him down from the tree I discovered a letter written by him. I have provided him with a casket as well as the belongings found on him. I have even included the letter of which his last words were written. I did read it so forgive me for my prying into this matter. I have decided to leave my name from this as I do not wish to be contacted. I am sorry for your loss, however the letter states other wise as this man was not well

From Smithy,
I knew him somewhat well, and a shame to se him
part from this world.

Good luck Bric, where ever you may be now!
Angel

sorry to see a companion die. i did not know him but i felt to leave my words. from henry

~From Galagars
Perhaps in time, we shall meet again.